Súhlas! at the Academy of Performing Arts is not demonic

BRATISLAVA, November 27, 2018 – Theater Lab will present the premiere on December 3 of play entitled Súhlas! on the motives of Dominik Tatarka: The Demon of Consent, which was studied by students of the fourth year of the Academy of Performing Arts.

Tatarka's motives have moved to more current conditions. Instead of the Writers' Union we find ourselves in a country in a kind of state medium. The political motive of the original text is nowadays more obvious and clearer. Especially today, when we are bombarded from every side by misinformation and hoaxes, which are created as a service to a modern autocratic regimes, which most of all resemble the connection of totalitarianism of the last century.

In this situation we meet Bartolomej Boleráz – the editor from one of these media and together with him we meet his doubts. Is a riot still possible at all? Is there anything we can really do about it? Am I more important, or the truth? What is the truth? These are the questions he asks himself and to whom his surroundings is willingly answering. This play is dedicated to everyone who has not yet fallen into social lethargy. This text, like Tatarka's Demon deals with the themes of freedom of thought, the clash of individual and community as a whole, but also a question of truth and principles for which man is willing to sacrifice own life if necessary.

The play is not trying to moralize or talk down to, it shows fictitious situation in fictitious country, which may resemble something. The rest remains with the viewer.
